

abroad specialising in Creative Pattern Construction at the prestigious London College of Fashion 2007. The exposure to street culture, vintage shops, bleached hair and the English saying "init" at the end of each sentence, left her hopelessly in love with the idea of being a stand-out individual. She returned to South Africa in 2008 with a PG certificate in Creative Pattern Cutting and immediately started working for Black Coffee as a junior designer. In April 2008, Loin Cloth & Ashes was born. Anisa's studio resides in Pretoria, where she lives with her family. "My biggest wish," confesses Mpungwe, is to have my name in an International Fashion text book, so that my grandchildren and their friends can see that it is okay to do what you believe in."
